DECORATING WITH Powdery PASTELS

Chalky tones have always been an attractive choice for interiors, giving rise to delicate, light rooms that are easy to live in. Create relaxed, grown-up schemes by pairing these hues with bold accent colours, or opt for impact with one sugary shade

Decorating with pastel shades needn't mean going entirely pale. An accent wall in a darker colour, such as the deep blue used here, serves to balance lighter tones. To add depth, introduce subtle textures with wool upholstery and curtains and rugs in patterned weaves.

A single chalky shade, like this spearmint used here, makes a gentle backdrop for pale kitchen cabinets. For a more striking emphasis, use it on the cabinet doors and match with white walls.

Powder colours soften graphic schemes, where they translate best as colour-blocked surfaces. Think about adding nature-inspired texture and interest to walls and complete with eye-catching details, such as prints or a radiator in a sugary hue.

A large-scale wallpaper will give a pastel scheme vitality. These generous roses in muted shades make an arresting backdrop to the marshmallow-pink upholstered bed. The trick is to keep all soft furnishings in tonally similar plain fabrics, allowing the wallpaper plenty of room to breathe.
